This sophisticated apartment in Singapore has been designed to encapsulate life in cosmopolitan New York City, where even its scent has been specially curated.

Before COVID hit, the owner living in this flat would travel regularly to New York City for work. It's a place where he finds great inspiration connecting with his colleagues at company headquarters, and where he can enjoy the buzz and energy that surrounds. With the desire to translate the vibe of a New York City hotel suite into his newly purchased HDB unit, he gave Right Angle Studio the rather tricky brief of making his flat "not look like one".

"The client wanted a haven where he could return to and relax comfortably," says Jay Liu, art director of Right Angle Studio. "The interiors are largely inspired by hotels in New York City, extending to the material palette and even the fragrance."
