Right Angle Studio forms new possibilities within the rigid layout of a small 592-square-foot apartment. Located along Silat Avenue within the charming Bukit Merah district is a cosy 592-square-foot apartment where a mother-daughter duo call home. The homeowner, a finance professional who cherishes her Scandinavian sojourns, sought to infuse her abode with the tranquillity she experienced in Copenhagen.

Initiated as a challenge to push the boundaries of small apartments, the design intent for this newly-built residence is to make the space perceivably larger than its actual footprint without altering the apartment's structural integrity. Thus, under the creative guidance of interior designers Alex Liu, Jay Liu and Goh Yuying of Right Angle Studio, the apartment underwent a transformative renovation that has redefined the essence of space.

The solution the team came up with was ingenious. They removed existing doors to install concealed ones that integrate oak panelling across both sides of the walls, thus creating an elongated tunnel effect in the unit.
