

LOOKBOX LIVING.

A Subtractive Sanctuary in Tiong Bahru

OLHA ROMANIUK

Lookbox Living

The Highline Suite

Olha Romaniuk
24.09.2025

In one of Singapore's most vibrant neighbourhoods, this Tiong Bahru apartment has been transformed into a retreat-like sanctuary defined by restraint, clarity, and a distilled approach to living. Designed around the principle of subtraction, the home reflects a disciplined lifestyle by paring back excess and focusing on essentials, creating an environment that is both spacious and composed.

The design begins with a philosophy of editing rather than adding. Instead of filling the home with layers of ornamentation, the approach was to strip away the unnecessary, revealing the spaces and elements that truly matter. This strategy shaped the home into a space that prioritises order and flow, reflecting the homeowner's understated way of life.

The guiding idea behind the design was to amplify openness while maintaining warmth. By focusing on clarity of space and refining the layout, Alex and Jay Liu, co-founders of Right Angle Studio, shaped a home that felt expansive without compromising its welcoming atmosphere. Each area has been carefully considered; its identity defined without adding clutter or visual noise.

Full article –

www.lookboxliving.com.sg/project/a-subtractive-sanctuary-in-tiong-bahru