

NEW NORM

“A measured response to contemporary domestic life.”

ALISON CHOI

New Norm Magazine

Greenmead House

Alison Choi
12.05.2025

Tucked within a verdant residential setting, Greenmead House offers a measured response to contemporary domestic life, where restraint and refinement guide every gesture.

Right Angle Studio’s approach to the interiors centres on quiet sophistication—not in grand statements, but in a careful layering of materials, considered lighting, and an emphasis on flow. The residence feels grounded and tactile, with each element working in concert to cultivate a sense of composed ease.

At its core, the home moves between contrast and continuity. A foundation of rich dark oak and earthy travertine anchors the interiors, their tonal depth bringing warmth and weight to otherwise pared-back architectural volumes. These finishes are used with precision, encouraging a rhythm of material repetition that subtly shapes how one experiences the home. Light becomes a primary influence on atmosphere, reflected softly across surfaces and drawing the outdoors in through expansive openings and deliberate sightlines.

Full article –
www.newnormmag.com/greenmead-house-right-angle-studio