Singapore-based Right Angle Studio has completed EJ Residence, a duplex apartment that balances minimalist design principles with luxurious materiality. Located on the periphery of the city, this residential project seamlessly integrates with its verdant surroundings while maintaining a refined urban aesthetic.

The studio’s approach to the interior architecture emphasizes what they call “perpetual essentialism” – a design philosophy that strips away unnecessary elements while preserving timeless functionality. This methodology manifests in clean lines, thoughtfully curated materials, and the orchestrated flow between spaces.

A significant feature of the residence is its open-plan layout, which dissolves traditional boundaries between indoor and outdoor spaces. Floor-to-ceiling windows frame the leafy exterior, creating an immersive experience that extends the living space beyond its physical confines. This spatial continuity is further enhanced by a carefully considered material palette of ash wood, marble, and lime-washed surfaces, which maintains visual coherence throughout the interior.
