Set against the industrial backdrop of the Tan Boon Liat Building, the CANCAN flagship boutique presents a proposition less about spectacle and more about composure. Named after a colloquial expression that loosely translates to “everything is possible,” the interiors reframe this local optimism into a generous spatial language.

The space is subdivided into fluid, pocketed zones calibrated for distinct modes of use. These pockets remain deliberately porous, allowing subtle visual overlap and seamless transition across varied scenarios. Movement and adjacencies are carefully composed to encourage moments of pause, gathering, and lingering, experienced in real time.
