At most furniture showrooms, the routine is quick: scan the floor, sit on a few sofas, check the tags, leave. CANCAN's flagship studio at Tan Boon Liat is built to break that habit from the first step. The entrance narrows into a dark, quiet tunnel-like atmosphere before the furniture comes fully into view. The pace has slowed before you have even started.

That is the idea. CANCAN Furnishings' flagship now spans a 3,000-square-foot studio on Level 11 and a newly opened 4,000-square-foot studio on Level 13 at Tan Boon Liat Building, inviting you to stay long enough to picture the furniture in your own home rather than judge it in passing. For co-founder Daniel Mok, that is the whole point.

Venturing in, the studio is not laid out in rows of products but as complete residential settings: living, dining and lounging environments you could imagine moving into. Curated by fellow CANCAN co-founder Will Zhang together with Right Angle Studio, each setting brings furniture, rugs, lighting, artwork and materials into harmony while still leaving room for individual expression.
